

Women's Marches & Rallies

Women's marches draw estimated 3M people across US

At least 3 million people participated in marches across the country to protest President Trump on Saturday, according to a review of official and unofficial estimates from the nation's largest cities.

Half a million people showed up on the National Mall and nearby streets for the Women's March on Washington, according to city officials, for an event that spurred similar demonstrations in several major cities.

The Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority said nearly 600,000 people had used the capital's Metro system by 4 p.m., ridership that eclipsed not only Friday's inauguration of Trump, but also the 2013 inauguration, when Barack Obama was sworn in to a second term.

Albany:

Crowd of 7,000 marches in Albany

The actual attendance at the Women's March, one of almost 700 held around the world Saturday, went far beyond her expectations, which were based on registrations through the event website. Not long after she had looked out from the base of the Capitol and couldn't see the end of a long line of women and men marching down Washington Avenue, officials told her there were easily more than 7,000 in attendance.

"It made me feel optimistic and inspired and motivated and proud of all the work that we did to make sure this event happened," said Jamaica Miles, the Capital District organizer for Citizen Action of New York, which organized the event.

Poughkeepsie: Poughkeepsie Women's March Across the Hudson

Poughkeepsie women's march across Hudson fills Walkway

At the Walkway entrance in Poughkeepsie, throngs of participants clogged nearby roads and parking lots, many carrying homemade signs. At one point, walkers completely filled the pedestrian bridge, the front of the line doubling back to its starting point on the Poughkeepsie side even as others were still joining the end of the line.

Park Manager Eric Hoppe estimated attendance at 5,000, making it one of the largest community events since Walkway's opening. Hoppe said the initial permit request estimated a crowd of 100.
